

THE NEW YORK PRESS. EDITORIAL OPINIONS OF THE LEADING JOURNALS UPON CURRENT TOPICS.

COMPILED EVERY DAY FOR EVENING TELEGRAPH.

The Lesson of October.

The Johnsonites Democracy had to gain twenty-two Representatives in Congress in order to be able to prevent the passage of bills over a veto. Up to this moment, while nearly half the members from the loyal States have been chosen, the Johnsonites have gained none.

There is a positive gain to the right; and the representatives previously chosen stand as follows:

Table with 4 columns: State, 1866, 1864, 1862. Rows include Vermont, New Hampshire, Oregon, and Total.

There was a failure to choose in one Vermont district, but both Republican candidates were far ahead of their Democratic competitor, and a Republican will surely be chosen next time.

We have also named a United States Senator from Pennsylvania in place of Edgar Cowan, and have secured either United States Senator from Indiana in place of the Hon. Henry C. Lane, who declines a re-election.

In Ohio, the Republican majority is at least 10,000 higher than last year. It is considerably higher in Iowa. In Indiana, the Republican majority is less than in 1864, but far higher than in any other year.

A Remarkable Conversion.

It is little that the London Times can do, in the way of moral influence, towards helping the settlement of the questions by which this country is at present agitated and divided. The American people have learned to estimate the utterances of that journal at their true value, and the opinions of "The Thunderer" have but small weight with us now-a-days.

Five demand in the premises were made, requiring the simple answer of yes or no from England, the money would be forthcoming. (Lancet) Jackson in his day, put in a demand upon France for similar indemnities, to the extent of five millions of dollars, with the alternative of reprisals upon French commerce, and what was the result? After some little chaffering and an appeal by France to the King of Belgium, the justice of the demand was admitted and the cash was sent over.

We know that the great bugbear of Mr. Seward, all the way through, has been the fear of a war with England or France, or both; hence his temporizing policy in regard to the French Mexican usurpation, and these Anglo-Belgian possessions, her navy would be demolished by our superior iron-clads, her commerce would be swept from the ocean by our cruisers, and her revolutionary uprising would be crushed by our military superiority.

The English Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Lord Stanley, made some striking remarks at the cable banquet in Liverpool lately on the importance of a cordial union between England and the United States. He expressed the conviction that upon such a union, "more than upon any other earthly thing, the future civilization of the world depends."

England and the United States.

The English Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Lord Stanley, made some striking remarks at the cable banquet in Liverpool lately on the importance of a cordial union between England and the United States. He expressed the conviction that upon such a union, "more than upon any other earthly thing, the future civilization of the world depends."

It is a very general belief in this country that England is not now anxious for friendly relations with us because she is in trouble at home—because she is isolated on the European continent, having no powerful allies, no strong bonds of friendship, no reason to look for aid, and that she is rather to expect from her acts of hostility more or less disguised—and because in the Irish "defection," in the Fenian movement, in her colonial agitations, and in her reform movement, which threatens to grow into revolution, she sees gathering perils, which render hostility on the part of the United States the most formidable of all the dangers she can possibly foresee.

Another conviction, equally strong in this country, and still more influential, is that when we were in trouble England did not show her sympathy. She did not think it so important to the civilization of the world that the most friendly relations should prevail between the two countries. She did not then think it the "worst and most mischievous thing which any human being could do," to estrange the two countries—or for one of them to inflict injury and damage upon the other.

radical intention, then these pots and darlings of theirs are excluded from the basis of representation, as they ought not to be, whether they vote or do not vote. They should be represented as the aliens, minors, and women of all parts of the country are represented at the ballot-box, by the adult male white citizens; in Congress by representatives chosen of those. They should be taxed for direct taxation and representation as are proportioned to population by the Constitution. We have heavy burdens to pay; the three or more millions of Southern blacks should not be exempted from bearing their share of them, and that total population is excluded from all representation whatever. Is this a representative Government?

Constitutional Amendment "Condition."

A bill accompanied the amendment, reported on the 30th of April, to provide for restoring the Southern States. It had two sections; one, that when they ratified the amendment they should have representation; the other, that the direct tax unpaid should be postponed ten years. This bill, which seemed to look towards representation, was defeated.
